This includes iOS, Android, and Windows. The web application can be used as a standalone application or integrated within the page of the website using an Adobe AIR based skin, which looks and feels just like the web browser. We use Adobe AIR to build a standalone application to browse the Internet, with a rich browsing experience. We want to make it a product that runs on the website as if we would have to install a standalone application on a computer, using the browser's features but without having to use a separate browser application. Moreover, we chose to use Adobe AIR to be able to deliver a desktop application with native feeling on several platforms without having to rely on a third-party web browser extension. This web application serves as a browser extension for Internet Explorer. It enables web developers to get fast and easy access to the functions of the IE toolbar without having to use the browser in a single user mode. Some of the features include: IE favorites, quick search, speed dial, history, and more. It's also a safe and secure tool to prevent malware attacks. Our main purpose is to let web developers get access to the browser functions of the desktop Internet Explorer without having to switch to another application. This is the main reason why we don't make any use of the IE browser itself. Furthermore, we offer you a free trial, so you can try out our web application for yourself before you decide to pay for it. Don't worry, we won't charge anything after the 14-day trial period has ended. Windows Terminal Service (WinTS) is a component of the Windows operating system. Slideshow (7 images) But this year she received a visit by a far stranger, or at least by someone who was slightly less well-known. "This year I was greeted by a local politician," Merzod, from the Canary Islands, recalled on Wednesday. "He said, 'This is a special season for us. I have come to support you, and you have my support for your sister island (Tenerife).'" Merzod, who is in her 40s and lives in the south of England, has been a seasonal worker in coastal towns for 10 years and has had experience of all manner of politicians, including a local mayor. And so when a politician on holiday from the northern Spanish region of Asturias arrived in her spot, she felt she had a bond. "He even said he wanted to shake my hand," Merzod said. So she accepted it and the politician was soon trying to grab as many hugs as he could. "He said he wanted to sit on my knee - a bit of a cheeky one - but I had to explain that wasn't possible as I had work to do." That led to the politician thanking her for her work over the past year and wishing her a good holiday, which in turn led him to congratulate her on her sister island's recent success in World Cup football. "I thought that was a bit strange," she said. "There was no ring, I don't understand football, and he was working." Merzod said that after the politician left she had to ask herself: "Did he really think I was related to Tenerife?" She laughed, but not for long. "I had to explain I have nothing to do with them," she said, as her husband, who was also on the site at the time, burst out laughing. "And he didn't want to believe
