Computer work environments The desktop uses a variety of common computer environments. Most desktop applications operate in the system tray (the area just below the menu bar where the clock, volume controls, and other system-related features are located). The menu bar is a small bar that runs along the top of the screen. It can be dragged to a new position and has a row of commands that are listed vertically in two columns. The menu is most visible and used when an application is open. An application (or app) is what Windows users would call an application. Since many programs have multiple applications, you may have more than one window open with more than one app. When an app is closed, the windows disappear and the app goes into the system tray. The title bar (or title bar) is the bar where the name or name of the app is displayed. The label appears in a font that matches the app name. The system tray contains icons that display the status and controls of various apps. Because the bar occupies so much space, you need to know what an app is doing in order to avoid accidentally interacting with it. When an app is closed, the windows disappear and the app goes into the system tray, where you can view its icon. The taskbar is a small bar along the bottom of the screen. An application's icon appears on this bar, making it easy to access that app. It's an area that hosts many applications. It's the menu that makes most of the visual change when you change between apps. The activity area is an area at the top of the screen where you can open applications, switch between them, and show and hide them. The task area is where the application appears. The desktop is the area covered by the windows of an app. The desktop is where you work on an image or project, and not in an app. The desktop is the primary area of activity. The primary window of an app is what users are likely to interact with most. Windows Windows are the interactive parts of the software. Windows provide the user interface to the computer, and are usually the most visible part of the user experience. A window is the window that appears on the display when an app or a program is run. It may contain a menu that offers to hide or close the window. Each window has a title

Removing a Color from an Image

There's no doubt that a `_color_`—or several colors—are a big part of any image. So, what's the best way to get rid of them? For starters, you have a couple of options. For a quick trip to the trash bin (with a fast Photoshop program), select the unwanted color in the Color panel's Swatches panel and choose Delete from the keyboard or press Delete. You can also choose Edit→Delete (or use the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+D) to remove colors.

Note

For more on the Color panel, see The Color Panel. Using the Black & White adjustment is another way to remove color from an image. With an image open in Photoshop, go to Image→Adjustments→Black & White. The Black & White dialog box opens. At the top of the dialog box, the image is displayed with a white canvas. However, the colors below are represented in black and white. To further specify how colors are removed, you can use sliders and a color picker (see Figure 7-22).
