The first rule of being an emerging talent is to never worry about being recognized. For the singer-songwriter Marcus Mumford, public acknowledgement has been a long time coming. The vibrant-looking, curly haired musician cut a different figure on Monday, when he was honoured as a member of Canada's Walk of Fame, the first musician to be recognised by the Canadian Screen Awards for his artistic and cultural contributions. "It's great, it really makes me proud, and it's a long time coming," Mumford told CBC Radio's Ottawa Morning's Debbie Murdoch. When asked how he felt about the award, he replied, "Well, it's cool." Mumford said he's long known that he's good at his job, but has often avoided praise because of how success has felt. "It's nice to know that you're good at something," he said. "But the accolades are all on the artist thing, and it's better to focus on the songwriting, the vocals and that kind of stuff. You don't feel too entitled when you're doing that and not feeling
