At the heart of this crackdown, as I discussed in my last column, is the government's plan to deploy a national army of 20,000 troops to take control of the United States consulate in Caracas on February 23, and to take control of the diplomatic mission of the US, Honduras, in Tegucigalpa on March 2. I wrote at the time, in this column, that this "is not a plan to export the 2017 Venezuelan regime's political power struggles to the United States, Honduras, or anywhere else." I also discussed the attempts by the Venezuelan military to reassert control of its own structure and the plans of President Nicolás Maduro to raise a new Amazonian ethnic militia to add to the existing "Trabajadores del Volumen" (Workers of the Volume) militia led by Jaime Pilapica. That militia was to play a key role in the February 23 "social missions" plan, which is the key element of the February 23 plans. "Social missions" are also part of the plan for reasserting control of state institutions. The Military's Counterattack On February 24, Maduro ordered the Defense Minister, Vladimir Padrino López, to "defend the diplomatic zone and the American embassy in Caracas," and on February 24, Venezuela's military launched an attack on the Caracas neighborhood of Chacao and on the Venezuelan diaspora community. In the north, it attacked the Zamora neighborhood, and in the east attacked a shipping terminal. Maduro's forces

"No pasará la ley de apertura de periodismo, que es una regulación que no se puede ni debe ratificar al pueblo boliviano, ni lo hagamos", declaró el Mandatario en declaraciones a radio Klub de su Casa Patriótica. El mandatario dio a entender que desde algunos sectores del Congreso, se pretende remodelar el alma boliviana. "La Constitución, su Constitución en vida de nosotros, va a quedar libre del golpe a la Constitución, que es tan escandaloso que no me quede fuera de la boca. Es como si estuvieran jugando al escondite, o se tratara de una cacería", afirmó. Corría el 13 de febrero de 2019. El antecesor de Morales, Ev
