Immunohistochemical expression of oestrogen receptor in normal and pathological oral mucosa. A study of 500 oral biopsies. The immunohistochemical expression of oestrogen receptor in oral mucosa has been studied by immunohistochemistry. One hundred twenty five patients with different pathological lesions were included in the study. Three stainings were performed in all the specimens: indirect immunoperoxidase with the ER-ICA-5 monoclonal antibody, direct immunoperoxidase with the ER-ICA-6 polyclonal antibody and chromogranin A (CgA). The quantitative evaluation of oestrogen receptor according to the score of the immunostaining revealed a decreased reactivity for the oral mucosa in 66.6% of the cases (score 0 to 2), but an increased reactivity in 8.8% of the cases (score 3 to 5). Ten biopsies with a score of 6 were considered positive. The histological type of the lesion (hyperplastic, inflammatory, hyperplastic and inflammatory, non-specific epithelial disorders, squamous cell carcinoma, diffuse carcinoma, adenocarcinoma) did not influence the antigen detection by immunohistochemistry. The reactivity for oestrogen receptor was apparently higher in oral benign lesions than in malignant oral tumours. Both direct and indirect immunohistochemical staining for oestrogen receptor detected greater sensitivity than CgA. Immunohistochemical

Here at EA, we wanted to enhance the aerial game, and really understand how players need to move the ball. We got to the heart of the issue in the player intelligence by understanding where players are heading, and where their preferences are.
