You should see it by mid-March and once that is done the landscape is simply stunning. The yellow clematis is starting to flower at the back of the garden, the lavender is also looking pretty though it is in flower still and the bluebells are getting their big colour up. The new bluebells are starting to come into flower again and the purple crocuses are coming up every few days. I might do a few photographs next week and put them on here. The good thing is that there is a good bit of sunlight this week and it is warm enough for Sticks and Stones to sit out. All the bulbs and seedlings I planted last year are now coming up and we are seeing more buds and flowers emerging on the woody plants. The winder wood is still very bare and needs plenty of mulch, as do the white hawthorn, but things are starting to come up nicely and seedlings will flower in about a month. We are all looking forward to having some good summer weather, but we are not planning on doing anything in the garden until the drought period is over. This means that we can concentrate on growing vegetables and not worrying about the same for our lawn. We will get it in a couple of months after that and it should be healthy and healthy looking. If you are in the north of England and are thinking about starting to grow your own vegetables, now is the time to do it. You should be able to buy all the seedlings at a reasonable price at the moment, it will become more expensive when the summer arrives. The bulbs and herbs are good too, but you should buy them in October to ensure you are able to use them all through the winter. If you do want to try it this year we will be starting a vegetable garden, with the help of our two girls, next month. The b7e8fdf5c8
