Finally, because judicial estoppel is used to prevent the "unjust enrichment of the party who has already received a windfall to which he was not entitled," Cowin v. Alexander, 810 S.W.2d at 256, judicial estoppel does not apply even if the insured does not benefit from it. Id. at 255. These are similar to equitable subrogation. However, subrogation is a legal fiction whereas judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine that makes no reference to a party's subrogation rights. Minn.Stat. § 65B.51(i). BNSF and Ford argue that judicial estoppel does not apply to subrogation claims because they are not identical to the transactions at issue in the federal court litigation. However, they cite only decisions that support the proposition that a defendant may use the doctrine of judicial estoppel to prevent a plaintiff from asserting inconsistent positions. See, e.g., Ryan Operations, G.P. v. Stearns-Johnsgard, Inc., 117 S.Ct. 2295, 2304 (1997) (applying the doctrine to prevent a plaintiff from asserting inconsistent positions regarding ownership in a federal suit and then later suing the same defendant in state court); McNally v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 929 F.2d at 229 (applying judicial estoppel to a plaintiff who had failed to disclose a pending state lawsuit against a competing insurer in a federal proceeding). However, the issues in the prior federal action and the federal present action are not identical. The federal action sought to determine whether Ford owned certain vehicles covered by a policy and whether Ford had violated certain licensing laws. The action did not seek recovery on the contract and did not involve any potential liabilities BNSF has under the contract. Courts in

Q: Trying to understand how the SQL query I am trying to understand how the following query works, and what does it mean, is it an update command on the table? Please help.

update table set col=1, col2=2 where id=1

A: It updates the value of col to be 1, and the value of col2 to be 2, where the given value of id is 1. This is a common way to update a row in a table. You'll learn more about
