For many of us, one of the best ways to remember things is to write them down. Unfortunately, the more we write, the harder it is to keep track of all the things we need to remember. Electronic Home Database enables you to take a document, menu, address, or to-do list and, save it to a disc for safe keeping. Later, you can retrieve it and compile it into a ring-binder reference. Electronic Home Database comprises a database application and a library management application. Your data is stored on your computer and the database application automatically creates a database and stores your information. Your personal data can be created in three general areas: Personal, Work, and Miscellaneous. To add information in each area, simply double click the appropriate entry and fill out the form. Once completed, you can save the entry by clicking the Save button. You can save many different types of data, depending on the type of data item. For example, a note will be saved as a text item, while a recipe will be saved as a picture item. In addition to storing and retrieving data, the library management application allows you to put your disc into a ring-bound binder for filing and storage, and to create new databases. Since the data is stored on your computer, you can print out a copy of the data for a more permanent record. You can save data to the database or to a disc, for safe keeping and retrieval. All you need to do is to use the "Save" button. This feature allows you to save up to 100 different types of data. Electronic Home Database also allows you to attach data items to your contact information. For example, you can attach a menu to a contact, or attach a memo to your wedding contact information. This feature allows you to associate information with your contact card. The personal area stores your personal data including: Birthdays Cards Diaries Imperial Lists It also includes a search function. To find your desired information, go to the personal area and then select the search box in the bottom of the window.

Type the information you are looking for and hit the Search button. Once you find the information you desire, you can scroll through the database by selecting the left or right arrow button. As you scroll through the records, the icons representing each item becomes larger in order to make it easier to select. The work area stores your work data including: Bank Accounts Bills Contacts
