Add alpha (transparency) layers Photoshop enables you to use what's known as _alpha (transparency) layers_, which enable you to combine different layers of an image and create visible "holes" for elements that are transparent. You can use multiple layers — a series of color and/or adjustment layers — to edit an image to create a variety of effects. You can create an entirely new image layer, apply the transparency, and then merge it with one or more image layers. To create an alpha layer, follow these steps: 1. In the Layers palette, click the Create a New Layer button to open a blank layer in the layers palette. 2. Click the Lighten or Darken Layer button (`Ctrl+L`) to open the Levels dialog box. See the next section for details on adjusting the Levels dialog box. 3. Set the Blending Mode to Multiply or Screen (depending on the color you want to paint through), as shown in Figure 8-9. This enables you to see an item such as a drop of paint or the tone of a pencil. 4. To add a new color to the image, use the Colors palette to choose a color, or use the New Color button. 5. Select the color you want the layer to hold. By default, when you open a new dialog box, only the new color appears, so you must click the small selection triangle at the left of the color name to select the color. In the Layers palette, the color appears in the layer's thumbnail and in the layer mask. If you want to select
