Field of the Invention This invention generally relates to an electrophotographic image forming apparatus and, in particular, to a pressure reduction structure of a blade provided in a transfer section and a method of forming an image by such blade. 2.

Description of the Related Art A conventional electrophotographic image forming apparatus such as a copier, a printer, a facsimile machine or a combination thereof has a photosensitive element on which an electrostatic latent image is formed. A uniformly charged toner image is formed on the photosensitive element, and the toner image is transferred on a recording medium, such as paper. A typical transfer section includes a transfer electrode for attracting the toner image on the photosensitive element to a recording medium. The toner image transferred on the recording medium is then fused to the recording medium by a fusing section. A conventional transfer electrode includes a flexible blade holder and a blade fixed to the blade holder. A tip of the blade is brought in contact with the recording medium with a predetermined force. The toner image transferred on the photosensitive element is then attracted to the recording medium by the transfer electrode. However, a higher force is required to produce the same fixing speed due to the deterioration of the toner image transferred on the photosensitive element, and the higher force may cause the flexible blade to be flexed and to wear. To overcome this problem, a transfer electrode provided with a combination of a hard blade and a flexible blade may be used to reduce the required force to form the image. However, when such configuration is adopted, the deformed blade may damage the photosensitive element or the transfer electrode may make contacts with the toner image by contacting the photosensitive element. A pressure reduction structure disclosed in Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 2005-219547, for example, is discussed to prevent the blade from being damaged. The pressure reduction structure changes a configuration in which the blade touches the photosensitive element to one in which the tip of the blade is kept separated from the photosensitive element. In addition, the pressure reduction structure controls the contact force of the blade against the photosensitive element in
