proliferative intramedullary fibrous dysplasia, endosteal osteosclerosis, and surface osteosclerosis.

Fibrous dysplasia also developed in the periosteal bone and in muscles and tendons. A right femoral osteosarcoma was found in a 14-month-old fox. The tumour arose in the periosteum and extended directly through the cortex into the medullary cavity. A subcutaneous fibrosarcoma occurred in a 4-year-old female fox. The large tumour mass extended through the dermis and onto the muscle layers. The tumour was firm and the tumour surface was smooth, covered by an intact cutaneous membrane. A right tibial osteochondroma in a 2-year-old fox presented as a rounded exophytic mass. In a 3-year-old fox, a femoral osteoma was found. The osteoma was located in the diaphysis of the right femur and contained mature bone trabeculae interposed in a connective tissue stroma. In the 10 foxes examined, 60 solitary and 9 multifocal benign neoplasms were found. The most common neoplasm was fibrous dysplasia. In addition, osteosarcoma, osteoma, myeloma, and extramedullary haematopoiesis were found. The high incidence of neoplastic lesions in this population of blue foxes is discussed in relation to their geographic distribution.

Q: Is web socket closeAtLeastOnce a standard? I'm currently developing an application with a web socket server, and I want to have the same behavior as browsers.
