I have a parent thread and a child thread. If I want to print a value of a variable from the child thread, in the parent thread, how do I do it? A: As an @plasma says you need to make sure that the variable is volatile. Or if you want a static variable, you must tell the compiler to make sure you see the changes from the other thread. The volatile keyword is used when the use of a variable might not be immediately visible. In Java, the variables are loaded in order, and loaded by the compiler on one thread and only then are set for use. So there is a race condition between the two threads. Also, only reading the variable in the other thread should be enough to solve the problem. It should not need volatile. A static variable declared in the parent thread will still be visible to the child thread, as the variable is local to the thread.

int myStaticVariables = 0; // this is visible to the child thread Thread childThread = new Thread(() -> myStaticVariables = 1); childThread.start();
