On top of this, FIFA's AI will now track the movements of up to 40 players at a time. It will anticipate, and determine, players' next move based on their current actions, the game state and the situation on the pitch. "In FIFA 20, we presented a new animation system called HyperMotion. For FIFA 22, we've taken it to the next level," said Andreas Seifert, Creative Director at EA Sports. "Powered by the new HyperMotion technology, our aim is to create a sport that feels completely intuitive, allows a more realistic representation of player and ball behavior, delivers deeper AI and provides complete precision passing - a revolution in the way we play the beautiful game. "In addition, we're developing brand-new player models, with detailed head, neck and shoulder geometry, and a new set of animation and damage systems that have been heavily enhanced. The quality of football moves and reactions has improved, with new ground reaction, tackles and aerial duels. In total, FIFA 22 will feature more than 500 new animations, including 40 new passes." "We've seen incredible growth in our partnership with the FIFA franchise in the last decade, and we are excited to continue this journey together with our long-term development partners at EA Sports. We have seen the benefits of the new animation system, and we are all looking forward to seeing the additional improvements to our world-class gameplay in FIFA 22." The number of animations in a game has grown steadily in recent years, but there are benefits to a more authentic feel. As well as improving overall visual quality, adding more animations will make the flow of the game much more intuitive, and will help the true impact of the ball and your skills truly come to life. In FIFA 20, there were more than 12,000 actions in a match. In FIFA 22, there are more than 40,000 animations. These are accompanied by a new set of physics and damage models that were overhauled to take more of a "player-first" approach, putting more of an emphasis on player reactions and passing and tackling. In FIFA 19, 40 new animations were introduced in the defensive phase to give the player a better feel for the situation on the pitch. For FIFA 22, this has been expanded to 100 new defensive animations that feel more contextual to the actions of the player.
