The Railways is set to enable customers to search for trains, book tickets and plan their journeys online at the click of a button, by using a computer and a compatible device, as part of a programme to improve existing passenger facilities and reduce costs. The move is aimed at reducing the government's dependence on manual data entry, said people involved in the process. The move is set to be a big change, especially in the ticket booking system, which is considered to be a revenue-generating area for the Railways. It handles over 60 per cent of India's total passenger movement. The digitisation of railway ticket booking could result in a change in policies like separate tickets for children and senior citizens, thereby helping these sections in getting access to the fastest train services and avoiding much harassment at railway stations, said people aware of the move.
