Inhibition of delta-Aminolevulinic acid dehydratase activity increases L-6-lysine and L-leucine pools in Saccharomyces cerevisiae. In this work, the effect of short-term inhibition of plasmatic (ALADP) and mitochondrial (ALADM) delta-aminolevulinic acid dehydratases in Saccharomyces cerevisiae on the cellular levels of L-lysine and L-leucine and the synthesis and degradation of the amino acids (AA) for growing cells were studied. For that purpose, the plasmatic and mitochondrial ALADP activity and the ALADM activity of the mitochondrial enriched fraction were inhibited using SHU-101 and L-683026, respectively. The AA levels and the synthesis and degradation of the AA (lysine, leucine, threonine, valine, glutamine, serine, glycine, histidine and alanine) were analyzed after 30 min-treatment of the cells with the inhibitors. L-lysine and L-leucine concentrations increased after treatment, while the other AA were not affected. These results indicate a modification of the ALADP activity as a consequence of the inhibition of the mitochondrial ALADM activity or a reversible modification of the cellular membrane and its permeability, allowing the entrance and retention of the L-lysine and L-leucine. In a nationwide opinion poll published by The Washington Post on Wednesday, a solid majority of Americans support President Trump's decision to rescind Obama-era rules governing transgender bathrooms. The poll found that 69 percent of registered voters support the president's decision, with only 27 percent of those surveyed voicing opposition to the rollback. "Those Americans who are opposed to transgender bathrooms have been in the minority for years," said The Washington Post's editorial board, which had previously suggested that the federal government "should defer to states and localities in regulating bathroom access." In 2015, the Obama administration released an extensive set of guidelines on gender identity under the guise of a much-ballyhooed "Dear Colleague" letter. The letter was introduced as a non-binding, executive branch document that would simply give guidance on how federal agencies should respond to questions about discrimination against transgender people. But the letter had the unintended consequence of legitimizing the concept of sex-based discriminatory protections at the federal level.

W. S. Jackson William Samuel Jackson (1896–1986) was a Scottish poet and painter, and later, a librarian. Jackson was born in Fife, Scotland in 1896, a son of William Samuel Jackson (1849–1932), a solicitor, and his wife, Jessie Hornibrook. His father was of Fife descent and his paternal grandparents were farmers from the area. He was educated at Kelvinside Academy and then studied at the Glasgow School of Art. He served in the Royal Scots during World War I. Jackson left the army on demobilisation in 1920 and became a painter, exhibiting regularly at the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts. He married a cousin, Ellen Rose (MacGregor) Jackson in 1922. He and his family then moved to Whitecastle near Gretna in the Scottish Borders. He took over the family's farming and dyeing business. In the 1930s Jackson began to paint in oil on wood and he also wrote verse, of which his best-known poems are probably 'The Fox at Whitecastle' and 'The Bluebird' (1933). He moved to Eskdalemuir in Angus in 1942 and was its first librarian from 1944. There are several of his oil paintings in the local museum. In 1946 he and his family left Eskdalemuir to live in Fife, and he was a librarian at the University of Edinburgh from 1947 until his retirement in 1967. He died on 14 April 1986.
