All of them work in real mode in theory, but they use an ATT BCD code, so you cannot access the BIOS. A new set of BIOSes come out that are 32-bit only. The gamer can enable the following boards: ALL CPU's are supported.. Direct attached sound board.. Optional: a regular sound board... There is only one sound card on this motherboard that supports the CPU. A great chipset for this board though. Compute module. Not sure if it was for PS3, Xbox or Wii. There is also a SCSI card on this motherboard that supports all SCSI devices...Q: PHP - Making a comma separated list of select boxes with a hidden input I have a select box like this: valueA valueB valueC How can I make a comma separated list of the values like this: I tried: $team_name= implode(' ', $team_name); And tried using the text property, but both only concatenate the values of the select box, but I need the comma separated list with the value hidden input. A: You can use this, $team_name= array(); foreach($team_name as &$teamName){ $teamName = implode(" ", $team_name); } $team_name = implode(" ", $team_name); It is a raw approach, and this is just for getting the comma seperated values. But it is simple. Update: If you need this hidden input, //Update to this, d0c515b9f4

I have been wondering why this doesn't work: function foo() { var myVar = 'foo'; } function foo() { alert(myVar); // > foo, as expected myVar = 'bar'; } I thought that by declaring a variable in function scope, its value should get initialized, even if it's not used. Is there a better way to do this? A: This is fine: function foo() { var myVar = 'foo'; } function foo() { alert(myVar); // > foo, as expected myVar = 'bar'; } You are only initializing it in the scope, it isn't actually being initialized, it's just a variable that has been declared. A: By initializing it you are only declaring the variable, and that's all. Note that if you use it later, you can still change it, as long as the outer function hasn't been called. In the first example, the variable is declared and initialized only within the first function, so it's inaccessible to the second function. In the second, it's initialized and declared within the second function. So the second function can access it and, because it's declared, be able to change the value of the variable. Of course
