The second article of this series deals with large-scale farming technologies. They are related to increasing the land area used for food production and often lead to changes in farming practices and management. The main components of these technologies are the increased use of fertilizers and other chemical products, the construction of large-scale livestock production farms, the use of non-climate-adapted breeds and the use of movable stocking densities. However, for each of these components the literature is very limited. Large-scale farming technologies have some environmental advantages but also cause a series of negative environmental and social effects, as well as social and economic disadvantages for the farmers. It is therefore important to carefully balance the advantages against the disadvantages.

April 24, 2019 Exclusive: Meet the most volatile NBA trade market of the season - but just what's driving the action? Our NBA trade experts answer that question, giving a first look at how the deal for Kawhi is shaping up, and why the Lakers' track record with Blake Griffin may be a deal-breaker How Much Should Kawhi Take? April 13, 2019 Analysis: Bennett on Kawhi The Clippers have been on the hunt for a versatile wing who can shoot three-pointers - can shoot free throws and defend the pick-and-roll - to complement their bigs (Blake Griffin and Willie Deane). They have been connected with the Raptors' Kawhi Leonard, and more recently the Lakers' Lonzo Ball. On the surface, Kawhi is an attractive candidate, but the questions have started to come. Let's start with what Leonard should be looking for.

- Can he be a LeBron-level player, or can he even approach LeBron's level of commitment? I'm not sure he's even in that conversation. He's never been the one in the spotlight.
- Who plays the most minutes? This is interesting because if the Lakers want a singular focus, then the answer is obvious: LeBron, Lonzo, L.A.'s system. That would potentially leave Kawhi with the Raptors, which means more minutes, but ultimately less impact in his decision on where he
