serious sam 3 coop lan crackEnzymatic pyrophosphate polymerization is a widely used industrial process for the preparation of polyesters and polycarbonates. For example, the preparation of aliphatic and aromatic polyesters and polycarbonates can be accomplished by the reaction of diesters of organic carboxylic acids, carbonates of organic alcohols, or carbonic acid diesters, with an aromatic or aliphatic dihydroxy compound or an aliphatic dibasic aromatic dihydroxy compound. The catalysts for this reaction include a variety of acids and bases with ion exchange resins, insoluble ion exchange resins, and complex metal salts being particularly well known. The above polymerization reaction is usually carried out in a reaction vessel or autoclave. Polymerization is started by the addition of a catalyst dissolved in a suitable solvent. After the catalyst has been activated by heating the reactor, the reaction mixture is heated to the polymerization temperature. The reaction is carried out by adding the reactants to the reactor over a period of time. When using a batch process for polymerization it is desirable to uniformly disperse the catalyst in the reaction mass to ensure adequate catalytic activity and thus control reaction conditions. The suspended catalyst must be uniformly dispersed to insure even distribution of the reactants to the areas of greatest catalyst concentration. In continuous reactors, however, there is an inability to uniformly disperse the catalyst as occurs in the batch process. The use of catalysts which have poor dispersion characteristics or are extremely sensitive to temperature and pressure often result in undesirable irregular activity and/or improper molecular weight control. In addition, the presence of large quantities of catalyst in the polymer product can interfere with subsequent filtration and purification processes. The use of ion-exchange resins or ion-exchange resin complexes as catalysts for the polymerization of esters or carbonates to form polycarbonates or polyesters has been described. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,885,382 describes polycarbonate systems with a fluid, cross-linked, ion-exchanged sulfonated polymer. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,099,034 and 4,134,842 describe methods for the preparation of polycarbonates. For example, by the action of an organo-basic compound added to the reaction mixture and ion-exchange compounds selected from the group of chlorides of zinc.

Today, we review Valerio Torressi's excellent book on all things Game of Thrones-related: Game of Thrones: The Cast and Its Characters. I consider this a must for every Game of Thrones fan—even if you don't plan on reading the series this year, it's an indispensable companion. The book is organized into three sections: (1) Characters and Monsters, (2) Monsters, Rulers, and Treachery, and (3) House Lannisters, a compilation of the show's main characters. I'll review all three sections in this post.. For anyone who has ever been on a Game of Thrones subreddit, this book is old news.. and Game of Thrones is a game of wargaming, such a thing as character history.
