The effect of the sodium channel blockers bupivacaine and pentobarbital on Xenon evoked responses has been investigated. The Xenon evoked brain potentials after lidocaine anesthesia had a shorter latency and a higher amplitude. The pharmacological profile of the two studied agents is discussed with respect to their action on sodium channels and their interaction with other neurotransmitter systems. Both the bupivacaine and pentobarbital experiments show a decrease in the duration of the P1 wave after the administration of each of the tested compounds. The duration of the P1 wave shortened with an increase in the narcotic dose, meaning that a lower dose of bupivacaine or pentobarbital would be required to induce a comparable CNS depression as lidocaine. The behavioral recovery was slower after the injection of bupivacaine than after the injection of lidocaine. This difference is discussed in the light of the role of serotonin in the CNS depression induced by anesthetics.Etiquetas Agente cero Agente emérito Agente inteligente Agente de Bolsa Agente inteligente Tení
