Q: Can you help me with my wireless IP camera setup? I connect the camera directly to my laptop via WiFi and vice versa. A: Hi If you are asking how to set up the camera via WiFi, then you will have to change the IP address of the camera. How this is done depends on your camera and how it is connected to your computer. All I can recommend is that you contact your camera manufacturer for instructions on how to set up the IP address of the camera on your computer. Good luck Q: Is it possible to setup a wireless video camera to automatically switch to my desktop at 9 a.m. each day and to automatically shut off at 10 p.m. each day? It seems to work fine with Skype and I am able to receive my messages, but I need help setting up the camera to automatically switch on and shut off and to do this manually as well. A: Hi With Windows you are using Windows. You can configure any program to do anything, it's up to the program to configure it for its own needs. Most applications have a config file with an entry that looks like this: "ComputerName_Password" As I am just looking for a command line answer, I'm not going to get into the Windows way of doing it. Best of luck Q: Can you help me with my wireless IP camera setup? I connect the camera directly to my laptop via WiFi and vice versa. A: Hello Aishwarya, Wifi means Wireless Fidelity, in short it means you can transmit data over the air without any kind of wires between the two devices. It's how you can connect 2 mobile phones over the air without them getting connected to each other. What you want to do would be just to connect your camera to your laptop via WiFi. Please look in the settings for your camera for a WiFi connection option. For Skype, you can use Skype on your laptop and connect your camera over WiFi, then from your laptop you could set up your camera and Skype to have a video call with your laptop (of course you will have to have a microphone and a camera set up on your laptop). To set up that over WiFi you could again look in the settings for your camera and look for WiFi. You should get an option to connect to a WiFi network and then have a password (what your laptop will need to know to connect to your camera).
