Penn State Scranton students took their training wheels off for the first time last week when they participated in the Penn State Scranton Catholic Campus Ministry Fall Plenary, which explored topics of religious freedom, religious education, role of religion in public life and Scripture-based discernment. "The goal of a university is to educate a student who can be an active citizen in his or her community, and that vision must include a strong component of public policy," Dr. Thomas G. Fox, the vice president for student life and dean of the College of the Liberal Arts, told the group. Founded in 1914, the Penn State Scranton Catholic Campus Ministry involves student and local clergy to engage with the campus community and recruit new students to the Catholic Church. This year's plenary took a look at "Religious Freedom" — a term that can mean different things to different people, according to Dr. Mary Newland, the coordinator for Catholic Campus Ministry. "It's not new but it's certainly a political movement," Newland said during a panel discussion that included Dr. Tom Fox, the Penn State Scranton vice president for student life and dean of the College of the Liberal Arts; Dr. Thomas Fox; and Dr. Jack Miller, vice chair for religion and holder of the Kibbie Blecher Distinguished Chair in Free Inquiry at Penn State. Tom Fox, who also attended Villanova University, guided the group through a history of religious freedom in America, from the push for separation of church and state in the Constitution to the Civil Rights and Women's Rights movements, and the rise of the Religious Right today. "We need to be clear what we mean by freedom." Fox said, noting that freedom is not the same as liberty. "American freedom is mostly the right of minorities to live as they choose," he said. Dr. Fox also answered questions about how the state can better support the freedoms of its citizens. Newland said that the most important step for the
