Business Statistics By J K Sharma..Glicentin/glicentin-related pancreatic polypeptide is present in the pancreatic polypeptide in the rat stomach. Fluorescence immunolabeling showed the presence of glicentin/glicentin-related pancreatic polypeptide in all type A cells of the stomach corpus, all type B cells of the stomach antrum and fundus, and in a small part of type E cells of the corpus; neurons of the myenteric plexus were negative. Direct immunofluorescence labeled the glicentin/glicentin-related pancreatic polypeptide/glicentin-immunoreactive endocrine cells of the corpus; these cells usually showed a bipolar shape. These endocrine cells were confined to the mucosa and submucosa. No positive labeling of type B or type E cells was observed. It is concluded that glicentin/glicentin-related pancreatic polypeptide is present in all endocrine cells of the stomach mucosa. Such cells are confined to the mucosa and submucosa and they are most likely to be type A cells. [Chest decompression in diving accidents]. The main problem of chest decompression in a diving accident is the risk of ventilation/perfusion mismatch, leading to pulmonary barotrauma and/or oxygen toxicity. If the pressure is excessive, the risk of drowning is of special significance. Because the selection of the most appropriate recompression technique depends upon a combination of various parameters including the depth of the accident, the length of the affected lung, the patency of the airways, the degree of lung damage, the degree of submersion, and the time of immersion, the most appropriate decompression regimen must be determined empirically for each diving accident. Although the viability of a diver can be determined by the clinical signs and the results of standard laboratory testing, it is preferable to perform early oxygen administration while waiting for an emergency transport team. The ultimate object is to ensure the rapid recov
