Tissue-specific transcriptional regulation of the von Willebrand factor gene by the second zinc finger of the erythroid Krüppel-like factor, KLF-3. Krüppel-like factor 3 (KLF-3) is an erythroid-specific transcription factor that regulates the gene expression of a subset of globin genes and a number of erythroid specific genes. We here describe the identification of the human von Willebrand factor (Vwf) gene as a novel target of KLF-3. We have localized the proximal Vwf gene promoter to a site (-1067 to -932) that contains the KLF3 response element (KRE). A strong increase in Vwf promoter activity was observed in K562 erythroleukaemia cells, which overexpress KLF-3 and a dominant-negative mutant of KLF-3, when compared to the vector control. As in the case of the erythroid genes, the proximal promoter of the human Vwf gene (-1378 to +2) was also found to contain a constitutive HIF-1 response element (HRE). We have also observed the presence of several binding sites for NF- κ B and c-Jun that exhibit a strong positive regulatory effect on the Vwf promoter activity in erythroid cells.

No. 12 Clemson rolls past UConn C.J. Spiller, left, rushes for a yard in the first half of an NCAA college football game against the University of Connecticut, Saturday, Oct. 15, 2012, in East Hartford, Conn. Associated Press HARTFORD, Conn. -- Clemson's defense had the most plays of any group in the 2012 BCS championship game, and the most of any unit in the nation. After a sleepless night in Central Florida a month ago, the unit was back in its element, and perhaps ever again. Blake Cataline had two
