It has been demonstrated that the X-ray method can be used to efficiently improve the quality and precision of the atomic model of an enzyme. In this paper, the structure of dihydrofolate reductase from Escherichia coli is refined to 2.9 Å resolution using x-ray data to 2.1 Å. In addition to the definition of the binding sites, this refinement has also defined the conformation of the protein. Comparison of the refined structure with that of other enzymes has shown that the 3-D structure of this enzyme is not an extremely rigid structure and that, when considering the active site, it conforms to the class I fold.[Bronchioloalveolar carcinoma].
