V7.5.0: The folder you want to unlock can be on one internal hard drive or an external..Q: JavaFX: obtain root of Controls I need to obtain the root of each node on the scene graph of my javafx application. I'm specifically looking to do this when the user opens a file, so once they have finished working on the file, I want to give them an option to save their changes. At the moment I do a "contains" check on the properties of all nodes in the scene graph. If it finds the node I want to add, it does the save. This works but obviously isn't very accurate, and I can't do the save in this stage because the file exists before the node is added. I've been trying to think of a good way of telling all the nodes in the scene graph to save their properties when the user opens the file, but I'm struggling to think of anything that isn't a hack. Any ideas? A: Write a controller for your file and add a root Node to the scene graph manually. EDIT First you should to define an event for your node (ex. a file was open) and write an event handler for that event. Then call a method in the handler to the "root" node. example: public class FXMLDocumentController implements Initializable { @Override public void initialize(URL location, ResourceBundle resources) { } public void saveFile(File file){
