Badoo is indeed an eye candy collection of animations and all emoticons are organized in categories, such as "Character", "Smiles", "Express" and "Other". Plus, each category has multiple subcategories, including holidays, laugh, love or kiss. Just as expected, the configuration level is very low and Badoo only comes with a limited number of options, such as dedicated tools to enable new content notifications, mask explicit content or enable shortcuts window. As you can see, Badoo is very easy to use, but it's still highly recommended to pay attention to the installation process as it also attempts to drop some additional software on every computer. Plus, it tries to change the homepage in your browser and add a new search engine. Badoo runs smooth on all Windows versions, but we've experienced some slowdowns during our test, especially when using it on Yahoo Messenger. New conversation windows seem to load a bit slower and the whole instant messaging application freezes for about a second every once in a while. Overall, Badoo deserves a chance if you're one of the users addicted to instant messaging because the application has the necessary features to make the whole experience a lot more captivating. Read the full review The best IM client ever I have been using many different IM clients and this is by far the best one ever. I love that it can connect to multiple protocols and is fast with Pidgin, and GTalk as well as many other protocols. I even use it with various other messenger clients. The best thing is that you can chose what kind of information to show and how it is organized. IMO, this is the best client there is out there.
