“While there was no such technology available at the start of the development process, we knew that we wanted to make this game the benchmark in terms of ‘authentic’ gameplay,” said PES Worldwide Producer Matt Jeys. “By developing the game using the most accurate motion capture data we have ever seen, we feel that we have succeeded in creating a game that will set the standard as far as player authenticity is concerned.” The coming of age for “human” FIFA player models takes place in stages, with each stage introducing new animations, contextual tweaks, and animations for passing, shooting, dribbling, receiving, and shooting. Four-player “Pair Attacks” are now a part of Match Day, and, by pressing the ‘Trio Attack’ button, one of three players will initiate an attack, sending the other two players into that player’s preset move and choreographed animations. The player models for Iniesta, Messi, Suarez, Bale, and Pogba have been improved, with full 3D, in-game models of each, bringing their likenesses closer to reality. The most successful motions will be copied by others in the game, and are also reflected within the player’s on-field presence. In addition to being viewed as a coach, players are also now seen practicing on the sidelines, managing their team during match day and preparing themselves physically. FIFA 22 introduces “Persona Matchday” which will have players playing matches up to three times a day on the same team, in their correct roles, and this feature will also include win bonuses. Additionally, players can now be given simulated injuries, which cause a player to retire from the game in that position, or lead to a benching for a short period of time. The “Scoreboard” page has been completely reworked, removing the teams, minutes, goals and substitutions displayed in favor of the true form, displaying statistics only. At the top is the points won/defeated, whilst the next row displays the rate of progress, with the third row showing the team’s goal difference, whilst the fourth displays the amount of goals for/against.
