Salesforce.com has signed up 50 percent of its users in the UK to drive its $2.6 billion cloud product targeted at small and mid-sized businesses. In the latest sign of the cloud's growing consumer appeal, the US software maker said UK users were motivated by the ability to deploy software for free and choose what data they want to store in the cloud, as well as the availability of discounts for cloud services. Salesforce said UK adoption was underpinned by its UK market share of four percent, and that about 40 percent of customers had made cloud investments with the company this year. The company said many of those have been sales and marketing organisations, which are traditionally early adopters of cloud. Business applications Salesforce has focused its cloud business on small and mid-sized businesses that are "still evaluating the effectiveness of cloud-based computing for their needs", including CRM applications, accounting software and supply chain management. The company said the UK was among a number of countries where Salesforce is "posting compounding annual growth". Across its nine International regions that include Australia, Canada, Europe, Latin America and the US, Salesforce said it would sign up 40 percent of users by the end of this year. In 2009 the company signed up 1,000 users and was adding about 4,000 a month, representing 5 percent of its total user base. Salesforce has been paying particular attention to emerging markets, starting with France and Germany. The company said it had also developed its cloud expertise to serve about 350 customers that include Bank of America, and Deutsche Bank in Europe. Salesforce currently offers cloud services through Amazon, Microsoft, SaaS services from Salesforce and data services from Hadoop service provider Cloudera.The Washington State Department of Agriculture (WSDA) is the principal executive and administrative agency responsible for developing, maintaining, and enforcing regulations for agricultural production in the state.
