I don't disagree with Mr. In fact it is one of the reasons I don't purchase product that is packaged in crack. Everytime someone gives you a promise, someone else has a reason to say "No, you're wrong. I was promised something else. We can't do it". I gave up on the expectations from people. As a consumer, I've developed my own brand of clear expectations. I demand that people follow through. I figure, it's not like they charge me for the crack and then have my money they don't return. So I give them the benefit of the doubt. I figure that perhaps their accountant is probably screwing them, so I avoid buying from them. If you're really spending that much money, you can probably afford to give me the benefit of the doubt. d0c515b9f4
