Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the design of shakers for vibrating raw materials such as cement clinker, cement clinker bedding or raw cement in a dry or moist condition. 2. Description of the Prior Art Shakers are commonly used in the field of raw material pulverization to reduce materials to a smaller particle size, after which they are sieved to separate out waste and remove fines. Shakers also provide an efficient means of applying vibration to raw material, thus providing the energy required to activate the reaction that occurs when raw materials are pulverized or to activate the process of preheating the raw material. The ability to provide sufficient energy to the raw material enables a smaller diameter rotor to be used, thus reducing the overall costs of shaker equipment. U.S. Pat. No. 5,974,811 discloses a dry shaker that has a generally cylindrical vane with a plurality of vanes. The shaker also includes a shaker rotor at the center of the vane assembly and a screen between the vane and rotor assembly. The shaker is mounted on a base, the base being fitted with a plurality of wheels that extend under a frame of the base and are fitted with p
