Greece's highest court on Friday gave the go-ahead to a bill allowing so-called "homosexual propaganda" to be erased from its curriculum, ruling that it was unconstitutional, and that textbooks needed to reflect society's views on homosexuality. The Constitutional Court said children should be educated to accept diversity in society and being gay was included in this notion of being diverse and accepting. The bill was passed by the parliament in April this year. Greece is known for its liberal attitude to homosexuality and although homosexuality is legal and accepted in most countries, gay couples are not recognised by the state. Last month a bill allowing same-sex marriage was approved by the Greek parliament. The bill was passed by a vote of 130 to 6 after four hours of heated debate. It was signed by Greek Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras, becoming the first new law passed in the country in more than five years. A new president was also elected, after the outgoing president stepped down and gave his backing to Tsipras, officially ending one of the country's political deadlocks. In July, 24 pro- and anti-LGBT protesters were injured during a protest against the proposed law. This is a major victory for Greece's left-wing Syriza government, which has done much to normalise homosexuality in the traditionally conservative country. It has allowed any party to air anti-gay views during election campaigns, given special protections to people who say homophobic things on social media and opened marriage and adoption agencies to gay couples. The argument against the bill was brought by the office of the Greek Orthodox Church, which led a campaign against the measure in parliament and public. It argued that the measure was unconstitutional and could damage children's right to religious upbringing. The text of the law removed from the National Curriculum content that made "homosexual relations" a criminal act for the first time in the history of the Greek republic, creating a "grey area" that could be exploited by paedophiles. Greece has been under financial turmoil for years, which forced its politicians to cut spending as well as raise taxes and tax evasion has been rife. At the same time, there is little political will to tackle the country's economic troubles. On Friday, the country's finance ministry announced that its budget deficit would be around €11 billion for 2015. This

What's New In?

The current Democratic debate featured a discussion about whether the US should withdraw from foreign military bases. Donald Trump says he opposes both of these bases, but should they be removed? Donald Trump's Republican Party says he should not. The Democrats say he should, but should the US finally bring home all of its foreign bases? Should we remove all of our foreign bases? As a candidate for the Presidency, I will negotiate the best deal that we can. I will insist that we have our bases covered, and that we also leave a network of safe places in the world for our friends and allies. But I will also insist that the US take back the bases from our allies on the ground. The US should not remain in foreign countries, particularly where we are not needed. FDR once said, the US is a foreign country, in that it does not wish to be a party to the existing truce, or to the peace that is the best that can be made. FDR said he wished to be America's "savior" in the sense of the opposite of the divisive, bickering, narrow minded, bullying politics of the DC corridor. FDR was fighting against the consensus politics of the big city elite and the DC establishment of his day. And the result was a radical move. A new sort of politics. It is an absurd contradiction for a man who said he wished to be America's savior, to have left a legacy that proves he was never able to save America. It is absurd because the DC consensus elite have turned America into a foreign country. In becoming a permanent permanent war in the Middle East, they have made America into a permanent war in the Middle East. They have made America into a country that needs to be saved. And that is why we must remove them, and insist on our national sovereignty. We must protect our country from the wars that they have made for us, and we must give our allies in the world what they deserve. The people who would wish to destroy the world, and America, do so at their peril, because people the world over, know the words of the Bible, "blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." Peace is the most important virtue that we have.
