A facile liquid phase exfoliation method has been developed to prepare the continuous and uniform graphene-inorganic nanoparticle nanocomposites with improved transparency and conductivity via impregnating inorganic nanoparticles of graphene oxide (GO) into the system. The nanocomposites were successfully applied as transparent and conductive coatings on both glass and plastic films, which exhibited better physical and optical properties compared with the uncoated samples. The resistance of the coatings decreased with increasing graphene contents and the best performance was achieved in the GO/nanoparticle concentration ratio of 1:
