A font viewer that gives you a graphical view of all fonts installed on your computer. This software is very stable, useful, and a great tool for checking your font settings. Users of Windows 10 can also use the tool to check their Windows font settings, by creating a shortcut and placing it in their Start Menu. * Open the program and select a folder to look for installed fonts in. You can select multiple folders to search. * When you are looking for your personal fonts, you can easily find them, since they are usually located in your Documents folder. * You can search for fonts in subfolders, if you prefer. * You can choose the font you want to check and when. The program will display the preview and info in a separate window. * Once you are done, you can delete selected fonts or subfolders. * Don't forget to change the selection to check fonts, if you don't want your personal fonts to be checked. FontViewer is a free and open source program for Windows, 32-bit and 64-bit versions available. You can also download the source code for the program from GitHub. Note: We tried the 32-bit version of the tool.

Mouse Skew Introduction

If you've ever suffered from blurred or crooked lines on your screen, you probably know how frustrating it is. You'll have to try really hard to fix it, which will waste lots of your time. You also might have noticed the dreaded "cursor looks like a blur on a monitor". Well, you're not alone. We've all been there at some point. How can we fix these problems? What are mouse and/or display monitor skew? A mouse or a monitor skew looks like that, because your mouse / monitor has slightly different axes. If a mouse / monitor is perfectly aligned, the mouse movement will look like this: But when they are not perfectly aligned, the mouse will move like this: When you get a bit close to the edges, you might have to move the mouse a little to the left or right. The other way of noticing these problems is by looking for graphics, texts, or symbols on the screen that are moving away from the point where they were first created, because of the skewed mouse. How to detect and correct display monitor skew? If your mouse is larger than the screen, using
