More particularly, the present invention relates to an apparatus for distributing driving force supplied from an electric motor to the wheels of an electric vehicle or the like with the driving force distributed to the front and rear wheels thereof, and method thereof. A conventional driving force distribution apparatus which distributes driving force supplied from an electric motor to the wheels of an electric vehicle or the like is disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 60-134501. According to the disclosed driving force distribution apparatus, output torque of a driving force transmission means is distributed to the front and rear wheels and drive torque is supplied to driving wheels depending upon the driving conditions of the electric vehicle by means of a coupling means. When the output torque of the driving force transmission means is increased by increasing the rotational speed of the driving force transmission means such as a drive shaft for driving the front and rear wheels, the power transmission efficiency of the coupling means decreases. In order to solve this problem, Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 60-134501 proposes a driving force distribution apparatus including a clutch means having a clutch structure in which the engagement pressure can be varied depending upon the required driving force. However, even if the engagement pressure of the clutch means is controlled depending upon the required driving force, when the output torgue of the driving force transmission means is increased, the distribution of the driving force to the front and rear wheels is simultaneously
